Sure, we all have a love-hate relationship with our alarm clocks. We love that we wake up in time for it to work every morning, but there is definitely some resentment, we would very much like to keep sleeping. Just five more minutes, please... While we can't guarantee that waking up is easier with a new alarm clock, we can definitely recommend some big ones that could make the morning a little more enjoyable thanks to its features, quality and value. Plus, there's one for everyone out there. For heavy sleepers there is one that will shake your bed to make sure you wake up. For smart technology, there is one that also doubles as a Bluetooth speaker. And for kids, there's a fun one that will make learning to get up on your own even easier. We've done research to find the best alarm clocks on the market so you can find one that makes your morning awakening call a little nicer. Alarm clocks that use light to wake you up are a smart alternative to your typical buzz-based gadgets. Intended to mimic the feeling of getting up with the sun, the clock uses a light that gradually grows brighter over the course of 20 or 40 minutes before the chosen alarm time. You can adjust the light to a comfortable level for yourself and your room, and the alarm itself takes the form of one of five nature-inspired sounds rather than a hard ring. It also includes an FM radio feature and snooze. The watch itself is elegantly designed and cool to the touch, so it's safe to use around kids. Light is UV-free, and clinical research suggests it could awaken with increased energy and better mood. Customers agree, writing that they have noticed a substantial difference in their sleep patterns and less grogginess when waking up. If you're looking for a watch for kids that makes bedtime (and wake-up time) fun, the Watch OK to wake up! The alarm clock is just the ticket. With a fun, child-friendly design (the watch can resemble a cartoon bug or a flower), it looks more like a toy than the standard clock, but has a major advantage that parents will appreciate. The clock shines green when it's ok for your child to get out of bed, teaching them independence and saving mom and dad sleeping preciously. When ready, it can be changed to serve as a regular alarm clock. The Look ok to wake up! Alarm Clock has a friendly and lively face (along with two interchangeable face plates) and produces a warm yellow glow when it is time of sleep. Customers highly recommend it for young children or preschoolers struggling with bedtime - parents say it's dramatically reduced mother calls, is it still night? in the early hours of the morning. While the little ones will respond differently to the clock, it proved useful to prevent our child from appearing outside their room an hour to see if the time of silence was over. —Linnea Covington, product tester Sometimes, old dogs really learn new tricks. This Sony gadget offers a twist on time-tested clock radio, giving it a 21st century facelift and some fun new features. A projector feature allows you to display the time on the wall for easy night viewing, while a very large LCD display gives the watch the appearance of a high-end tablet. It allows users to set two separate alarms, with the option of their standard bells and rings (or radio) complemented by various sounds of nature for a more relaxed wake-up call. It also includes a USB port, so you won't have to reach a distant exit to charge your phone or other devices. Customers say the Sony AM/FM Dual-Alarm Clock Radio matches simple functionality with the high-tech style, saying the projection feature is especially ingenious. Another advantage worth a call is its wake-up system, where a low-volume alarm slowly grows louder: waking up gently instead of getting you out of bed. You can't go wrong with a clock radio, and this one from DreamSky checks all the right boxes. The four-inch LCD screen is easy to read, and the simple interface allows you to program the radio to play for a preset period of time while you fall asleep. In the morning, you can wake up to a bell or the sound of the radio, with the option of snooze intervals of eight minutes for up to an hour. It also includes a USB charging port, adjustable brightness control and a gradual alarm clock system, gently increasing the volume of the radio or bell as you increase. Guests call the DreamSky a great watch, mentioning the screen's ability to dive when needed to sleep uninterrupted. One note: radio is just FM, and buyers suggest buying a set of backup batteries in case of a power failure or hiccup in the electric current. Anyone who has ever lived with roommates knows the special torture of being woken up by their roomie's alarm clock morning after morning. This Sonic Alert watch has a smart solution to this common problem, with a vibration function that wakes you up with a smoothie instead of a ring. Just slide the Super Shaker record under the mattress, and it will vibrate your bed when it's time to wake up. Problem solved! And don't worry, if you still want to use the regular alarm, it's very loud. The sonic alert clock also allows you to set snooze times of 1-30 minutes, and is portable enough to be travel friendly. Guests say it is ideal for sleep-dwellers, or any roommate situation where varied sleep schedules should be accommodated. If you are someone who is Looking for a place to charge your tablet or smartphone, this radio watch will make sure you're never at a loss again. Equipped with a high-speed USB charging port, it's great for anyone who routinely connects to their favorite device before looting for the night. The watch itself has a handful of cool features too, as a projector shows time on the walls or ceiling and a backup battery that guarantees that it will not be packed in case of a power outage. The LED display measures 1.2 and can be set to high, medium or low brightness to sleep comfortable. Customers call the Electrohome USB Radio Charge Alarm Clock one of the best they've seen, saying the projection feature is an important bonus (in addition to their charging skills). All told, it's a great radio watch and a guarantee that you won't spend the minutes before bedtime looking for your home for this missing phone charger. Looking for an alarm clock with a retro twist? LI Bean's Moonbeam Alarm Clock has plenty of inspired style in the middle of the century, with a design that is straight out of the 1950s. Available in six colors (all with a vintage twist), it's a statement marriage of form and function. While it may not seem as high-tech as your peers with your analog clock face, it actually includes a USB port for easy device charging, so you don't have to give up your modern amenities to get that old-school look. The watch has a bell tone alarm and the LED light alarm option, along with an option to snooze and backup battery. Guests are advanced about the precise period style and the mild alarm clock option. Note that like any analog clock, it will dial quietly as it keeps time. Final verdict Our best bet for alarm clocks is the Philips Wake-Up Light alarm clock (seen on Amazon), which uses light to mimic the feeling of getting up with the sun. Customers say they have seen a substantial difference in their sleep patterns when using this watch. If you are looking for an alarm clock that is designed specifically for children, however, go with the Look OK to wake up! Alarm clock and night light. What to look for in a wake-up noise The key to the success of an alarm clock is its ability to get up and get out of bed. The types of noises produced by a watch can vary widely, and some may be or more effective for you. Standard ring variations are common, but you may also prefer nature noises or the ability to use radio as a wake-up call in the morning. Consider your preferences while searching. Battery backup Nothing is worse than waking up to a blinking alarm clock that needs to be reset, only to realize you're done. If you live in an area prone to power outages, make sure that any alarm clock you buy is equipped with a battery backup. The battery will keep the clock running even if the power supply is interrupted, meaning the alarm will still go off at the set time, saving you stress and frustration. USB charging USB charging is alarm clocks more and more frequently. It may be a must if you want to keep your phone handy by the bed, but you need a convenient power supply to charge it. If you don't opt for an alarm clock with a USB port, keep in mind that it's likely that your watch will take over the electrical outlet next to the bed, perhaps requiring you to connect your phone somewhere further afield. distance.
